Globalization and interdependence: development cooperation with middle-income countries

Fiji:* draft resolution

Development cooperation with middle-income countries

The General Assembly,

Recalling the outcomes of all the major United Nations conferences and summits in the economic, social and related fields,

Reaffirming its resolution 67/226 of 21 December 2012, entitled “Quadrennial comprehensive policy review of operational activities for development of the United Nations system”, in which it recognized that middle-income countries still face specific development challenges,

Recalling its resolutions 63/223 of 19 December 2008, 64/208 of 21 December 2009 and 66/212 of 22 December 2011,

Taking note of the outcomes of the international conferences on development cooperation with middle-income countries held in Madrid on 1 and 2 March 2007, in San Salvador on 3 and 4 October 2007, in Windhoek from 4 to 6 August 2008 and in San José from 12 to 14 June 2013,

Taking note also of the regional conferences on development cooperation with middle-income countries held in Cairo on 11 and 12 March 2008, in Minsk on 16 and 17 May 2013 and in Amman on 23 May 2013,

Emphasizing that middle-income countries must take primary responsibility for their own development and that their national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes, measures and policies aimed at expanding the development opportunities of middle-income countries, while taking into account their specific national conditions,

* On behalf of the States Members of the United Nations that are members of the Group of 77 and China.

Recalling all of the principles supported by the United Nations system, including those of predictability, universality and progressivity, and reaffirming the importance of providing strategic support to all programme countries, at the request of the national Government, in order to address their specific needs,

Highlighting that development cooperation strategies for middle-income countries should be adapted to each particular context and help to preserve and sustain their economic, environmental and social achievements, and that such cooperation should not come at the expense of aid to least developed countries,

Noting that national averages based on criteria such as per capita income do not always reflect the actual particularities and development needs of middle-income countries, and recognizing the significant diversity of middle-income countries,

Recognizing the efforts made to review the classification criteria of the agencies, funds and programmes of the United Nations for middle-income countries and to adapt them to the particular development challenges of all developing countries,

Recalling that, despite notable reductions in extreme poverty, middle-income countries as a group are still home to approximately two thirds of the world population that lives in poverty, and that efforts to address those challenges should be supported in order to ensure that achievements made to date are sustained, including through support to the effective development of comprehensive cooperation policies,

Recognizing that high levels of income inequality constitute an underlying factor in the vulnerability of middle-income countries and constrain human development in most of those countries, and that economic growth in many middle-income countries needs to be translated into development,

Recognizing also that, despite the achievements and efforts of middle-income countries, a significant number of people are still living in poverty and inequalities remain, and that further investment in social services and economic opportunities are needed in order to reduce those inequalities,

Stressing that middle-income countries continue to face particular challenges, inter alia, related to job creation, the diversification and transformation of their economies, and access to technologies and international markets, and, in this regard, that national efforts should be complemented by supportive global programmes measures and policies aimed at creating an enabling environment at the international level for development,

Stressing also the need to consider a gap-based approach in identifying priorities for cooperation with middle-income countries, in accordance with their national priorities, taking into account different structural gaps in poverty eradication, in terms of, inter alia, inequality, investment, savings, productivity, innovation, infrastructure, education, health, the environment and fiscal structures, that are holding back sustained, equitable and inclusive growth,

Recognizing the challenges faced by middle-income countries in achieving sustainable development, understood as the balanced integration of its three dimensions, with poverty eradication at its core, in their national policies and programmes,

Recognizing also the need to better understand the multidimensional nature of development and poverty and the significant supportive role that the United Nations system should play in this regard,

Expressing deep concern over the effects of the economic and financial crisis on middle-income countries, particularly in the efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goals, and the high indebtedness of some of them,

1. Takes note of the report of the Secretary-General;¹
2. Recognizes that middle-income countries still face significant challenges in their efforts to achieve the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, and in that regard underlines the importance of international support, in various forms, that is well aligned with national priorities to address the development needs of middle-income countries;
3. Acknowledges the efforts made and successes achieved by many middle-income countries in eradicating poverty and achieving the internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals, as well as their significant contribution to global and regional development and economic stability;
4. Acknowledges that statistical averages based only on criteria such as per capita income do not reflect the actual particularities and development needs of middle-income countries, and recognizes that this type of classification fails to recognize the diversity among and within middle-income countries and disregards the multidimensional nature of development and poverty, and that these criteria fail to measure factors such as unequal distribution of income, quality of life and meeting basic needs;
5. Requests the United Nations, in that regard, to develop a more robust and comprehensive conceptual framework regarding the current diversity among developing countries that will preserve the continuity of the current modalities of multilateral development cooperation with those countries, and which should include equity, human development, industrialization, economic development and environmental sustainability, to be considered and adopted by the General Assembly;
6. Underlines that the cooperation of the United Nations system with programme countries should contribute, in the long term, to accelerating progress on the Millennium Development Goals and other internationally agreed development goals and targets, under the progressive and universal presence of the United Nations system;
7. Recognizes that, with two thirds of the world's poor population concentrated in middle-income countries, cooperation aimed at those countries can have a multiplying effect by contributing significantly to the achievement of internationally agreed development goals, including the Millennium Development Goals;
8. Reaffirms the increased importance of South-South cooperation, and in this regard encourages Member States and the funds, programmes, specialized agencies and other entities of the United Nations system involved to mainstream support to South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation to help developing countries, at their request and with their ownership and leadership, to develop capacities to maximize the benefits and impact of South-South cooperation and triangular cooperation in order to achieve their national goals;

9. Welcomes the solidarity of middle-income countries with other developing countries with a view to supporting their development efforts, including in the context of South-South and triangular cooperation, and takes note of the financial, technical, technology transfer and capacity-building support that is being provided by developing countries, particularly to least developed countries, through South-South cooperation;

10. Acknowledges with appreciation that several countries and groups of countries are already implementing duty-free and quota-free market access to exports of least developed countries, and calls on developed country Member States that have not yet done so, and developing country Member States declaring themselves in a position to do so, to provide duty-free and quota-free market access;

11. Underlines the need for sustained efforts towards achieving debt sustainability in middle-income countries in order to avoid a debt crisis, and to that end notes and encourages further efforts by international financial institutions to enhance facilities for them;

12. Recognizes the role of public-private partnerships as an effective instrument for middle-income and other developing countries in meeting the challenges of sustainable development;

13. Calls upon the international community, including international financial institutions, to continue to improve support for the development efforts of middle-income countries through targeted technical cooperation, the provision of resources, technology transfer and capacity-building, as appropriate, while taking into account their national priorities and development policies;

14. Acknowledges that official development assistance is still essential for a number of middle-income countries and that it has a role to play in targeted areas, taking into account the needs and domestic resources of those countries;

15. Calls upon the international community to continue to undertake timely, appropriate and targeted measures to address the ongoing adverse impact of the world financial and economic crisis;

16. Urges the entities of the United Nations development system, in particular the funds and programmes, and the regional commissions, in accordance with their respective mandates, to improve support, as appropriate, for middle-income countries and to improve their coordination and exchange of experiences with other international organizations, international financial institutions and regional organizations in this field;

17. Urges the United Nations system to provide enhanced support to middle-income countries, including through technical cooperation and other modalities of assistance, taking into account the development needs of and support for least developed countries, to strengthen their national capacities and reduce their external vulnerability;

18. Recognizes the need for the United Nations system to continue providing development assistance to middle-income countries that is aligned with their national strategies and policies while targeting their existing and emerging needs, particularly with regard to sustainable development challenges and including policy advice and formulation, technical cooperation and other modalities of assistance, to strengthen their national capacities and reduce their external vulnerability;

19. Decides, in this context, to create a specialized unit to address the particular development challenges of middle-income countries, including sustainable development and poverty eradication, and to follow up on the implementation of the present resolution within the Department of Economic and Social Affairs of the Secretariat;

20. Also decides that the specialized unit should prepare a United Nations action plan to address the need for a strategic framework for development cooperation between the United Nations system and middle-income countries, which should be submitted to the General Assembly for its consideration by 2016 and should be elaborated in full consultation with Member States, including least developed countries, regional organizations and other relevant stakeholders;

21. Stresses that the concerns and special challenges of middle-income countries deserve due consideration in the elaboration of the post-2015 development agenda;

22. Requests the Secretary-General, in collaboration with all regional commissions, to submit to the General Assembly at its seventieth session a report on the implementation of the present resolution, including a comprehensive assessment of the support provided by the United Nations development system for development cooperation with middle-income countries, and decides to include in the provisional agenda of the session, under the item entitled “Globalization and interdependence”, the sub-item entitled “Development cooperation with middle-income countries”.
